How to design marketing emails that look great and deliver real results

Designing the Perfect Email: Get Your Email Opened

Designing the perfect email isn't just about finding the right images and colors for your message. Design begins in the inbox — before someone even clicks to open. In this section, we'll take a look at a few best practices to help your emails stand out and get opened.

1. Choose a recognizable 'from name'

The number one reason people open email is because they recognize who it's from. Be sure to use a name your subscriber is going to recognize. This could be your business name, the name of a person the email is from, or a combination of both. Example: Dave from Your Company.

2. Use a branded 'from email address'

To look the most professional we recommend using an email address with your company domain such as @yourcompanyname.com. If you have no other choice than to use a free webmail domain (e.g., Gmail, Hotmail, Comcast, etc.), we advise you to avoid using Yahoo and AOL due to the higher likelihood of delivery problems.

3. Invest in your subject line

Your subject line should catch the recipient's attention and give them a compelling reason to open. 50 characters is the sweet spot for subject lines, but emphasize the first 32 to account for mobile device cutoffs (32 characters for iPhone, 40 for Android). A good rule of thumb is 4-7 words.

Tip: Keep your email from looking like spam. Avoid using excessive capitalization (in other words, WRITING IN ALL CAPS) and repetitive punctuation (for example, excessive use of ..., !!!, and ???).

4. Utilize preheader text

The preheader is the line of text that appears beneath the subject line in the mobile inbox. Most mobile inboxes display 75-100 characters, but focus on the first 5-8 words to catch the reader's attention and entice them to open.

Designing the Perfect Email: Get Your Email Read

After someone clicks to open your email, there are a number of factors that will determine whether or not they decide to read it.

According to an industry survey, 75 percent of people will delete emails that don't look good on a mobile device. If you're not designing emails to work on any device, you could be putting your business at a disadvantage. Here are a few important rules to follow to design emails that actually get read.

1. Choose the right template

With the majority of emails opened on a mobile device, it's important to use templates that are either mobile responsive (which means the email adapts based on the size of the screen it's being displayed on) or a single-column template that offers a mobile-friendly experience. Emails can be prepared with IntelliClick to provide a mobile-responsive layout for the people receiving your emails.

2. Brand your email

Branding your emails will help your business stand out in a crowded inbox. Every email should include your logo at the top of your message — that way if someone clicks to preview your email, they'll recognize it's coming from you. Also be sure to select colors that match or complement the colors in your logo.

3. Control your fonts

Keep your design looking professional. Avoid using too many fonts. More than four can make your design look busy. A good rule of thumb is to use one font style for headlines and another for body copy.

4. Find the right balance of colors

Too many colors can make your email look disorganized and difficult to read. Other than black, restrict yourself to a max of four colors for fonts — a different color for headlines, body text, buttons, and links. For background colors, it's always best to use a lighter color background with a darker text.

Designing the Perfect Email: Lead Readers to Action

1. Don't overdo it with images

A recent industry analysis of email sent found that emails with 1-3 images see the highest click-through rate. Choose an eye-catching image that supports your message.

Tip: Always include an image description in case their email program disables images. The description can also entice readers to click on the link associated with the image.

2. Keep your email copy concise

People will quickly scan your email — especially when reading on a mobile device. Keep your email clear and concise to ensure your emails are easy-to-read and lead people to take action. On average, emails with 20 lines of text or less (or about 1,200 characters) see the highest click-through rates.

3. Include one primary call to action

Your email should include one clear action for the reader to take. That primary call to action should be one of the first things people see when opening your email. Position your main link toward the top of your email so that it's visible without the reader having to scroll to read more.

Tip: A recent analysis of customer emails found that adding more than 5-7 links (excluding links to social media bios) has a minimal impact on click-through rate. Emails with 1-3 links see the highest numbers of clicks per link.

4. Include relevant social links

Even if your email doesn't include a specific call to action, it's a best practice to include links to your other online presences (website, blog, social media) to make sure you reach your audience everywhere they are.

Designing the Perfect Email: Get Your Emails Delivered

In addition to making your emails look great, effective email design will also improve the chances of your emails making it to the inbox. Keep these best practices in mind for your next email.

1. Be careful of attachment sizes

Many email clients limit the size of the attachment your readers can receive. Stick to an attachment size of 10mb or below to avoid any delivery issues with your message.

2. Audit your body content

Avoid using words in your body content that might identify your email as spam. Avoid excessive and repetitive use of: ALL CAPS, 10 (or more) CAPS in a row, or 4 (or more) of the same punctuation mark in a row.

Tip: Be sure to use a balance of text and images, and not just a single image without any supporting text. This is a tactic that's commonly used by spammers and can get your message flagged as spam. _____

3. Test your links

Make sure your readers get to where they're trying to go. Be sure to use the proper URL structure (for example, <http://yourwebpage.com>) and point to a valid webpage when including links in your emails. IntelliClick allows you test all links before you send.

4. Use the right 'reply to' email address

When someone replies to your email, the reply should reach a real person. Avoid using email addresses such as: no-reply@yourbusiness.com, bounce@yourbusiness.com, noreply@yourbusiness.com, or donotreply@yourbusiness.com.

5. Include a link to unsubscribe

Since email marketing is a permission-based vehicle, legally all messages must include a simple mechanism for subscribers to opt out. All email messages sent with IntelliClick include a link that allows people to unsubscribe easily.

Design the Perfect Email: A Checklist for Success

Use this checklist for your next email.

Single-column template: Choose a template that looks great on mobile.

Subject line: Use 50 characters or less, emphasize first 32-40 characters to account for mobile.

From name: Use a recognizable 'from name' and email address.

Preheader: Focus on the first 5-8 words to entice people to open.

Logo placement: Place logo at the top of your email.

Fonts: Use fewer than 4 fonts.

Fewer than 3 images: Don't overdo it. Use 1-3 images.

20 lines of text or less: Keep your copy concise with 20 lines of text or less.

Action above the scroll: Include a primary call to action for people to take.

No more than 3-5 links: Position your most important links at the top of your email.

Use social media buttons: Make it easy to connect with you on social media.
